GOVERNOR ADAMS SPEAKS.

The address issued by former Governor Alva Adams to the people of Colorado is a striking document. With an absence of bitterness that is surprising, even in a man of Governor Adams lofty ideals, he sets forth the conditions and circumstances surrounding this brazen robbery and announces his intention to return to his business at Pueblo, to again take up his work as a useful, honorable and honored private citizen. Governor Adams has long since won a high place in the esteem of his fellow citizens. He will stand even higher now.

In his address he calls attention to the various schemes concocted to wrest from him the fruits of his fairly won victory, and the scheme that finally succeeded. He is right when he says that Peabody's willingness to resign a few hours after he had been seated was a confession of Peabody's belief that he had not been elected. If Peabody had been sincere in his expressed statement that he received a majority of the honest Colorado ballots no power on earth could have forced him to give it up to him.

If the Republican rascals in the legislature had believed that Peabody was elected, they would never have permitted him to resign. The whole affair reeks so with fraud and corruption and shame that Colorado will be years in recovering from it. For years to come the name of Colorado will be synonymous with all that is criminal in politics. That the outrageous robbery will have the effect of shattering the Republican party in Colorado there is little reason for doubting. But the disruption of the Republican party is of small consequence.

The theft of the governorship is the only point worth considering, and the Republicans will never be able to justify it. As Governor Adams says in his address:

"A legislature cannot appeal the decision. A majority cannot make stealing respectable."

"Integrity is the polar star in the moral firmament, and the state or individual that does not sail by it will come to wreck. . . . It was a dishonorable victory, dishonorably won. Let those responsible look over the cost in cash and in deed, and see if they dare give the account to the public eye."

The Illinois legislature has passed a resolution offering to loan the state of Kansas the sum of $100,000, without interest, for a period of six years, to aid in the establishing of a State oil refinery to fight the Standard Oil Company.
